

Do you research, or work in, Gender-Based Violence?

Do you want to learn more about the peer review process?

Peer Review Training

The Editorial team at the Journal of Gender-Based Violence (JGBV) are running online training for researchers, practitioners, and policy makers who are interested in reviewing for our Journal.

Tuesday 19 October 2021 from 1 pm to 4 pm (BST).

The training will consist of:

- Watching a training video with time for comment and discussion with Editors;
- An opportunity to review a real academic article submitted to the Journal and discuss;
- See the process of submitting a review through the Editorial Management System in action;
- For those interested, register to be a reviewer for the JGBV.

We welcome practitioners and policy makers as we have a policy and practice section in the Journal and always welcome practitioner expertise.

The Journal has a number of experienced regional Associate Editors who promote the Journal in a number of international regions. Having international diversity within the review process is important to us. As such, we encourage attendees to this training from across the globe.

To book a place please Click HERE. If you are interested but can't attend this session or have any questions, please email jgbv-editorial@bristol.ac.uk.

policy.bristoluniversitypress.co.uk/journals/journal-of-gender-based-violence